NP12 Houses
Nowadays "housing" has become a design object that is restricted by commercial viability within the context of contemporary production relations and the lifestyle. It is intended for:

The basic questions so far are to confront this somewhat problematic phenomenon, which inevitably relies on an extensive amount of data that you may not wish to consider, before taking up this issue of design.

The decisive questions concerning design focused on how to relate elements concerning construction to elements concerning lifestyle.

What kind of a constant should there be that would provide both standard, fast production and create variables to accommodate different lifestyles depending on the future users?

The solution:

NP12 houses = 6 fixed shells, 300 different dwelling alternatives, 12 different lifestyles...
