How does ecology turn into neoliberalization in the context of urban transformation? In time, we already have a thousand times more than we have never been interested in human history; maybe we have reached the limits on this world. Collective anxiety tends to end is constantly through mechanisms of use of a co-opted image of ecology. Risks can be foreseen and controlled in Istanbul, risk on the ground, in New York, in the tidal water. The political risk created as a result of the maneuvers of the politics; today the e on in Istanbul, like in many other places, finds echoes in this earthquake speculation vacuum. Risk is there as it always has been, but the city has turned into a ground for "catastrophe" land grab. While long-abandoned totalitarian grand gestures of nature-engineering continue to be tools of political power through projects like Kanal İstanbul, a small scale community vegetable garden finds itself at the heart of the "commoning" discussion. Like the people who have rights to this garden also have rights to the Black Sea to oppose an artificial canal that will irreversibly change the hydrology of it?
